BE CAREFUL,
ATOMIC MOUSE....

WELL, NOW THAT'S VERY NICE OF YOU COUNT
GATTO! AND TO SHOW YOU I'M WILLING TO HELP A MAN GO STRAIGHT, I'LL SET IT UP WITH THE MAYOR FOR YOU!

OH, THANK YOU, ATOMIC MOUSE!

THE FOOL! HE'S PLAYING RIGHT INTO MY HANDS — I'LL RULE THE WORLD AFTER THE FOURTH OF JULY!

THE DAY OF THE FOURTH OF JULY PARADE...

YOU SAY COUNT GATTO
WILL PARADE A WHOLE
DIVISION OF TOY
SOLDIERS DOWN
MAIN STREET?

YES — AND IT SEEMS TO BE LEGITIMATE THIS TIME! I HONESTLY COULDN'T FIND ANYTHING WRONG WITH THE IDEA, AS MUCH AS I SUSPECTED HIM!

BUT COUNT GATTO HAS OTHER IDEAS...

SOLDIERS — THE ONES THAT ARE REALLY ATOMIC BOMBS! FIRST, I'LL TAKE OVER MOUSEVILLE — THEN THE WORLD!

NOW ISN'T THAT CLEVER!

THEY LOOK SO REAL,
DON'T THEY?

LOOK, MA, THAT FUNNY ONE IS GRABBING THAT POLICE-
MAN AND MAKING HIM SCREAM!

SAY, THIS IS CLEVER! I DIDN'T KNOW OFFICER
CASEY WAS GOING TO BE IN THE SHOW, TOO --
SEE THE WAY HE'S PLAYING ALONG WITH THAT ROBOT SOLDIER BY PRETENDING TO SCREAM!

I SHOULD HAVE KNOWN BETTER THAN TO TRUST GATTO!
WE MUST HAVE TEN THOUSAND OF THESE THINGS LOOSE
IN MOUSEVILLE NOW! I'LL TRY TO STOP THEM!

HELP!

SAVE US, ATOMIC MOUSE!

RED NED'S DANGER

RED NED, the young squirrel, was puzzled.

He had been very industrious, gathering nuts for the winter, just as his mother and father had told him to do.

And he had, he thought, been very clever about finding a storage place for them.

He would race along the limbs of the big walnut tree, balancing like a tight-rope walker in a circus. Then he would leap through the air like a daring trapeze performer in a circus, chattering and laughing like a clown. He was young and liked to have fun.

But Red Ned didn't let fun interfere with his work. He merely made his work seem like fun and then it didn't seem like work. He would grab a big walnut in his strong teeth and race back over the limbs and leap a few feet to the roof of the farmhouse. Then his sure, little feet would take him to the very edge, to the very corner of the roof. There he would drop his nut in the storage hole he had found.

He would just drop the nut in the hole and then, quick, like a squirrel, would race back to the tree for another. But after he had dropped several nuts in the hole, he was puzzled.

They weren't there any more.

Red Ned was brave and energetic and also agile, but he was very young. He couldn't hold back the tears. He sat on the edge of the roof and began crying.

"Boo-hoo!" he cried. "Somebody's been stealing my walnuts!"

A crow heard him and shouted, "Caw! Caw! Cawing all cars!"

Other crows joined in.

AT first Red Ned thought they were serious, trying to help him. Then when he realized they were just making fun of him, his tears ran more freely.

"There's a thief around here!" he wailed. He wished his mother and father were there, but they were some distance away gathering hickory nuts.

A jaybird hopped to the roof ridge and asked, "Why are you blue, little squirrel?"

"I'm not blue! I'm RED!. You're blue!" responded the squirrel.

The jay, being a wise old fellow, chuckled.

"Merely a manner of speaking, lad," he said. "I mean, why are you unhappy? Why are you crying?"

"Somebody's been stealing my walnuts."

"Aha, a crime!" exclaimed the jay. "Well, I'm one of the boys in blue. You may count on me to catch the culprit!"

SO saying, the jay went off and made several arrests. He arrested a robin named Robin Dooh, who stole from the poor and gave to the rich. He arrested a sparrow who held up people with his bow and arrow. He arrested a goose who was laying gold-plated eggs and trying to pass them off as the real thing. But he never found anybody who had been stealing walnuts. None had walnuts in his possession. All had perfect alibis,

"Very baffling!" admitted the jay, returning to Red Ned.

He arrived almost simultaneously with Red's father, Mr. Rusty Squirrel.

"What's baffling?" asked Rusty.

"I've been putting walnuts in a secret hole and somebody's been stealing them," asserted Red Ned.

"Where is the hole?"

"Right here!"

Rusty Squirrel would have liked to laugh right out loud. He forced himself to keep his face serious. He had been a boy squirrel himself and he knew how terrible it feels to be laughed at. It took him a moment to control himself so he could speak.

FUNNY ANIMALS

"Son," he said at last, "you have made a little mistake."

"I have?" Red Ned was almost ready to burst into tears again.

"Yes," said his father, putting his arm on the youngster's shoulder, "but don't worry about it. Young fellows always have a lot to learn. When I was your age I made mistakes, too."

Red Ned didn't say anything, but his lip quivered.

"Now look," said Rusty Squirrel, pointing to the hole, "here's where you stored your nuts, isn't it?"

"Yes," said Red.

"Well, nobody stole them," declared his father, "Look down there."

Red Ned looked over the edge of the roof. He was amazed at what he saw. All the walnuts he had gathered were lying in a neat little pile at the corner of the house.

"My walnuts!" he cried.

"Your walnuts," grinned his father.

"But who put them down there?" asked Red Ned. "Is somebody playing a joke on me?"

"No," responded Rusty Squirrel, "you put them there yourself."

"I did?"

"You did!"

"But! How?"

Red Ned's father chuckled. "My boy, you have many things to learn. You probably wondered why your mother and I had never made use of this fine hole to store walnuts in. Didn't you?"

"Yes, I did."

"Well, I'll tell you. This is a drain pipe."

"A drain pipe?" Red Ned had never heard the term.

"Yes," continued his father. "It's what the farmer uses to drain water off his roof. The water goes through this hole and through a pipe down to the ground, the same way your walnuts went. Now the moral of this is, don't put your money in a bank unless you know where the money goes."

"Bank?" asked Red Ned.

"Well, that's a word that people use," said his father. "A bank is a place they put money for safe keeping. But with us, nuts are money, so we must be sure that we put our 'money' in a safe place, the same as people."

Red said he was sorry he had been so foolish.

"It's all right," said his father. "We all make mistakes. Now hustle around and get some more walnuts and put them in the storage place that your mother and I have pointed out to you. By the way, don't try to get the nuts that are on the ground at the other end of the drain pipe. Don't go near them."

"Good advice," agreed the jaybird, perched on the roof ridge.

But Red Ned was a stubborn little squirrel. He had gathered those nuts. He felt they belonged to him. He was going to surprise his father and recover the nuts he had more or less thrown away. He leaped from the roof to the walnut tree, ran along the limb like a tight rope walker, scurried down the trunk, plopped on the green grass of the lawn and ran toward the pile of nuts at the bottom of the drain pipe.

"Oh, Oh!" exclaimed the blue jay. "Oh, Oh!"

Red picked up one of the walnuts in his teeth.

A gray streak flew through the air toward him. A sharp claw pierced his skin.

He screamed.

The blue jay dived.

"Here goes nothing!" said the jay, to himself.

He jammed his bill into the cat. The cat released his hold on Red. Red scrambled up the tree to safety. The blue jay got out of there very fast, too. The cat looked a little disappointed, but at the same time, he had patience. "I'll get you both later," he seemed to be thinking.

LATER, on the roof, the blue jay spoke to Red Ned, the young squirrel. "Red," he said, "when your father tells you 'don't', he probably has a good reason. So DON'T!"

Red Ned replied, "I may be young. And I may be squirrelly. But I've got a little sense. When dad says 'don't', I WON'T!"
